The purpose of The International Undergraduate Research Symposium is to educate, inspire, and prepare each student for a successful scientific life of service to humanity.

To that end The International Undergraduate Research Symposium sponsors an annual international scientific conference. Future International Undergraduate Research Symposia will be held throughout the world. The next, in 2012, is in Belgrade, Serbia.

The Conference seeks to advance undergraduate research, train tomorrow's scientific leaders with practical career experiences and promote an awareness of the world through the free exchange of ideas. Since the large majority of students at all universities gain invaluable knowledge working with international students and faculty, this is critical towards their educational experience and in broadening their horizons.

The Symposium includes workshops, research presentations from students and faculty, field trips to local natural areas, and tours of local scientific companies and organizations. Conference participants will also learn more about a global business in life sciences, chemistry and technology and learn about their products.
